“The Cost of Revolution”
*The Life and Death of Richard St. George

Gather at Primitive Hall to hear this exciting and unusual story of an Irish officer in the British Army!

You’ve never heard of Richard St. George? Neither had many of the staff at the Museum of the American Revolution until they began to research their latest exhibition.

St. George was a landed Irish artist and a British Army officer who fought on the battlefields all around us in the Philadelphia Campaign. The Museum is now telling his fascinating story, but our lecture and performance will give you an inside look at both this exhibition and at the man himself.

This special program features an illustrated lecture by Matthew Skic, the Museum’s exhibition curator. It will be followed by a theatrical re-telling of St. George’s life and career written by Philadelphia playwright Chris Braak and performed by actor Seth Reichgott.

You can learn about the exhibition at www.amrevmuseum.org. But be sure to join us for a unique evening and a new view of the Revolution. This event will sell out, so return the form and make your reservation soon!

New in The Hall

Lately, our visitors are especially enthusiastic about Joseph Pennock’s original tall clock in the first-floor parlor. The beautiful walnut case has undergone an intensive historic evaluation and restoration at Winterthur, under the supervision of conservator Mark Anderson.

The clock works have also been meticulously restored, and they now strike the hour with the same chimes heard by Primitive Hall’s 18th century inhabitants! We are thrilled to enrich the Hall with this time-honored colonial treasure.

We also have a new and elegant 18th century gateleg table on view in the upstairs center hall.

Tours and Visits

Our active docents have recently welcomed several local nonprofit organizations to the Hall for tours and receptions, as well as individual tours. For information about visiting the Hall, go to www.primitivehall.org.

A Great Summer Concert

For the fifth year, balladeer Charlie Zahm and fiddler Tad Marks played under the trees in the Walnut Grove. For their August 25th concert, we welcomed over 100 guests who toured the Hall and enjoyed perfect weather and great music. Charlie and Tad will be back next summer!
